CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

In this chapter the research explains a conclusion and suggestion of the result of the study. She hopes the explanation can contribute to the readers or student who want to do similar research the research entitled Defense mechanism in the movie script Luckiest girl alive which is Adapted Screenplay by Mike Barker & Jessica Knoll.

5.1   Conclusion

In this research I analysis the defense mechanism behaviour of Ani character in "Luckiest girl alive'' movie script Adapted Screenplay by Mike Baker and Jessika knoll using psychology theory and supporting the theory by Sigmund Freud. This research also consist of the analysis of main character, characterization, defence mechanism, and psychology behaviour.

It can be concluded that the main character in this film is Ani who is shown in the film "Luckiest girl alive" there are several events that have been analysed to show evidence that Ani is the main character in this story, she leads the plot from the beginning to the end of the story. In this film, it's about Ani having such a perfect life. From her career to her romance, Ani works as the editor of a glamorous New York city women's magazine and has an affectionate fiancé from a good family. But Ani keeps the tragic events that happened during her teenage years, she was raped by many people by her school friends.

Moreover, the researcher three characterization of Ani. First, dark past. Second is Ani is ambition and optimistic woman she is a woman who is very ambitious to become a writer, a famous magazine in New York city, finally traumatised and emotional, Ani still likes to remember her past, when her mood is not good anymore.

In this research, there are two types of Defence mechanisms described in Ani's personality namely repression and denial. Repression is an unconscious process, in which unwanted thoughts, feelings, or memories are transferred to subconscious consciousness accidentally.

Denial is a Defence mechanism used to reduce fear by refusing to acknowledge the truth. Ani is also included in this category because he always Multiplier, his fear by writing in his diary, or he goes shopping, and goes partying with his friend. In addition, the researcher focuses on the analysis psychology Behaviour of the main character. I saw this in every scene. When did he remember the shooting incident at his school, when he saw a knife that was lot of blood. And when he was feeling anxious, Ani often daydreamed about the rape that happened to him when he was in high school.

Lastly, the symptoms presents in Ani's behaviour, it can be concluded that she experienced childhood trauma. From the analysis research can conclude that the characterization of the Ani's in the movie script "Luckiest girl alive" reveals to defense mechanism behaviour.

5.2   Suggestion

The researcher used related theories or approaches to get the maximal understanding of the movie script. She used Defense mechanism theory by Sigmund Freud to fully understand the childhood trauma, behaviour in the film. However, it is possible for new researchers who want to analyse this film script by using other approaches or theories in analysing to get a broader understanding of the film script. By reading this the researcher is expected to provide new information for readers especially for students who want to do a similar research and enable them to understand deeply about psychopath behave. Last but not least, this research can give valuable contribution for English Department as one of useful research.