

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

This chapter discusses the research's conclusions and recommendations. Based on the findings of the research question analysis, a conclusion is developed. The purpose of a suggestion is to provide knowledge to the following researcher who wishes to conduct research in the same area.

5.1 Conclusion

The main character in this movie used language that may be examined using linguistics, such as metaphor. A few metaphors were utilized in the dialogues between Moana and Maui. The researcher used theories from Lakoff and Johnson (2003) in the study they conducted, including the structural metaphor, orientation metaphor, and ontology metaphor. Three different categories of metaphors—five structure metaphors, two orientation metaphors, and four ontology metaphors—were identified in this study. Therefore, it can be said that structural metaphor, which has five frequencies, is the most frequently used metaphor. The source, which is the target, is often clear and abstract.

According to Kovecses' theory of emotion, the researcher also discovered that there are six different sorts of emotions: anger, fear, happiness, sadness, pride, and shame. There are one anger, two fear, five happiness, one sadness, one pride, and one shame emotions, according to this study's findings.

5.2 Suggestion

The researcher identified three statements about metaphor in this study, namely their types, meanings, and emotions. Here are some tips for aspiring researchers who are interested in this area of study:

1. There are many films that could be studied. A different movie genre might be used by the next researcher. like scientific, epic, horror, and more genres. However, it would be preferable if the following researcher used a different object, like speech, a picture, or an advertisement.
2. The next researcher may examine metaphor in terms of both verbal and visual elements.
3. The following researcher might employ a different theory to create the metaphors that will be examined in the study. Consequently, the following researcher can comprehend metaphor more fully and thoroughly.

From this study, The researcher anticipates that this study will aid future researchers who wish to pursue similar fields of study and will also be beneficial to all readers.
