

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

5.1 conclusion

The discriminatory and stereotypical treatment of black people can be seen through the film The Green Mile. In this case, film does not only function as a medium of entertainment, but can also function as an information medium in describing the life experiences of black people in America.

The impact of racism on black people has led to treatment in several aspects including, First, discrimination in the field of work, black people are given jobs as gardeners. This can be seen in the film The Green Mile, where black plantation workers are seen as lazy, dishonest, and careless in the way they describe the lives of black people during the slavery period.

Both aspects of legal protection. In the film The Green Mile, black people do not get legal protection, namely when John Coffey is sentenced to death, even though if the case is explored more deeply, it will reveal that John Coffey should not have been sentenced to death. In the film The Green Mile, black people are also shown as stupid and idiots. As a fool can be seen from his timid character and halting speech. This character is a stereotypical caricature of black people who appeared during slavery. Black people are described as people who are lazy to work, cowardly, often confused, stuttering.

5.2 suggestion

From the results of my research, I can give 2 forms of suggestion, namely:

1. Academic suggestion

This research can be developed using different methods, such as reception analysis with different discussion contexts, such as audience acceptance of films with black themes or other racial themes, and data collection techniques can be done through interviews with movie review informant.

2. Practical Advice

The existence of films with black themes can reveal the deep-rooted problem of racism. It is hoped that through this research, the attitude of all people who have seen black-themed films can be more open and strongly oppose the issue of racism, and in the end the problem of racism that can occur anywhere, especially in America, can slowly decrease and end mainly among blacks.
